CFP: Migrations in Mongol Eurasia: People, Ideas, Artifacts

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem
International Conference, December 18-20, 2017

Organizers: Michal Biran and Jonathan Brack

The creation, expansion, consolidation, and dissolution of the Mongol Empire (1206-1368) generated a huge amount of human migrations, followed by animals, artifacts, ideas and institutions. The ripples of these movements continued to exert their influence long after the Empire collapsed in the mid-14th century. This multifaceted and complex array of Eurasian mobtilies will be the focus of our forthcoming conference.

The conference seeks to illuminate various facets of migrations, of people, both groups and individuals; knowledge, including science, art, religion, technologies, political culture, and imperial institutions; as well as material goods. We are particularly interested in panels and papers exploring the following topics:

Towards a Typology of Migrations- dealing with one or more types of migration (e.g. refugee migrations; tribal migrations; trade diasporas; military defecions; nomadic migrations; ordo migrations; labor migrations; environmental migrations; , compulsory relocations; voluntary migrations) in various parts of Eurasia or across the continent during the Mongol period.

Motivations and Mechanisms of Migration- why, how and to where people chose to migrate. Such papers might explore issues such as the age and gender of migrants; the ethnic and confessional networks and their role in supporting further migrations; or political/economic/strategic/environmental motives for migrations.

Spaces of Migrations: e.g. cities; trade networks; pilgrimage sites; ordos; war; migrant literature; artistic expressions of migrations…

Material Migrations: of artifacts, images, and goods e.g. food, plants, animals, artistic motives, textile, trade goods, monetary aspects and numismatics.

Migrations of Knowledge and Ideas: featuring developments in various sciences, arts, technologies, religions, and political culture, including Mongol legacies in post-Mongol Eurasia.

We especially also welcome panels devoted to one of the issues described above, or to various migrations within/into/from certain regions (e.g. Migrations and Migrants in Anatolia during the Mongol Period; Sufism and Mobilities in Mongol Eurasia; Chinggisid Political Mobility, Empire and Cross Cultural Contacts in Mongol Eurasia

Culture in Post-Mongol Eurasia; Animal Migrations in Mongol Eurasia). Individual papers also welcome; some papers may be accepted for poster presentation.
